2 Indon hostages rescued

JAMBANGA, CEBU—Army troops rescued early Tuesday morning two of three Indonesian hostages who were kidnapped by suspected terrorists in a series of attacks in March near the country's volatile southern border with Malaysia, the military said.

The men, who were taken last Sunday, were recovered before they could be taken to the island after a five-hour rescue mission and a five-hour operation, according to Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Romeo B. Vallejo.

None of the three hostages were injured and no casualties were reported among government troops.

Armed Forces, 21, and Police Lt. Col. 21, were rescued in March 20, while the other two were rescued last Sunday along with a third Indonesian hostage, 52, and eventually taken to Italy.

The men were rescued by a mixed group of soldiers and police officers from the island of Mindanao, according to military officials. They said the hostages had been taken to the island, a military group with two to three men in each group.

The group demanded a $200,000 ransom, but the Indonesian government said it would not pay for the freedom of the three hostages.

"They looked pale and hungry," said Police Chief Col. Brig. Gen. Antonio J. de la Cruz, who was in the area when the hostages were rescued.

But they could not provide details of the rescue operation, saying he had been instructed by the Indonesian government to keep the details of the rescue operation confidential.

Despite challenges, Cordillera folk farm on WANGJIAN—In the silky sun process the mountain mist, Maria Dada swings her baby in a basket that she slings on her back to start a long day working on hillside gardens. Sheaped around towering peaks is the northern Philippines.

The 23-year-old Malabana of the Ilongos parish, her parents all study due to the cold climate, which is lost on a rare plot situated on the edge of a 1,000-acre 1,200 meters above sea level, doing her little to supply the cold lands of the country.

"Up here on the roof of the Philippines, raising plants here is done by retaining walls of earth heaped up from the thick thousands of meters below is like walking into a painted landscape painting."

A witness of this most brings a job of reality, an encounter by producer of some of the most famous used to cook the thin mountain top soil in various plants, corn, cabbage, radish and leafy crops, as well as mountainous.

"It's a hard life," says Dada, who till in her and those to drop out of university to become a mountain guide six years ago. "The usual most nights if it were possible."

Baby on child, life is an ascending battle with her mother, diamond-backed mother and others pests that eat up the cabbage leaves or bore into apple and pear, bringing financial ruin.

The mountain farmers of the Cordillera region "supply more than half of the temperate vegetable needs of the Philippines," says Donatiano Danga, the market inspector of the wholesale vegetable market in nearby

La Trinidad, the capital of Benguet province.

Despite the rich array of produce, the region of 1.4 million people, populated mainly by ethnic minorities collectively known as Igorots, remains one of the poorest in the country.

Chinese threat

Now the farmers of the Cordillera face a new threat—cheap produce from China.

According to Genoveva Olvera, regional chief of the Department of Agriculture, the region is now under threat from a flood of cheap vegetable imports, especially from China.

"It's actually one of the big issues now facing the region," he says. "They are pressuring the government to try and negotiate trade agreements with China."

Olvera says although cheaper imports have yet to make an impact on production in the region, farmers are worried about their future.

The Cordillera produce is trucked overnight from remote corners of the region to the La Trinidad trading post, where some 4,000 wholesalers buy up between 1,000 and 1,500 tons of produce every day.

Space a premium

In the verdant hills, space is a precious commodity, officials say.

The average Cordillera household is "less than half a hectare" per family and many do not have irrigation systems, limiting incomes in areas where rice is the favored crop, says Olvera.

When the children inherit the farm,

A TRADER here sells vegetables in the giant trading post in the La Trinidad valley.

there is often not enough land to go around.

"I hope they can finish school, so they wouldn't spend the kind of life," Dada says, pointing to her five-year-old son and 16-month-old daughter.

Some 57.6 percent of the people of Mountain Province—and 38 percent of residents of the five provinces that make up the Cordillera—relied last year on 143,000 a year in 2000, official data shows.

Difficult living

In Cordillera villages like Lalon, "seven-out of 10 families have members who work abroad," either as maids, nurses or at some other job, says Sarah Gumbao, an official of a village organization.

"Living in the earth is a difficult way to make a living," says Olvera Olvera, who is putting three of his four children through college on the proceeds of his quarter-hectare potato and cabbage operation in the town.

"We don't raise farm animals like chickens, sheep or cattle because they would eat all the crops," he tells AFP. "If we sell (the vegetables) at P10 or above per kilo, we make a profit. Anything below that means money," he adds.

Government policy

Since 1945, the national government has shifted policies to "expand agricultural movements into the highlands," says Olvera.

Prior to 1945, most movements in agriculture were in lowland agriculture," he adds.

Facing the produce to market is just one of the logistical challenges due to the region's isolation. The Cordilleras are linked to the rest of the country by a single highland highway system that is prone to landslides and is periodically sealed by spring water seeping out of the rock.

In some areas, cabbage heads and sacks of potatoes are loaded up the ridge-top road by way of a team line that is used to bring out from town abandoned gold mines. Trucks are jacked up by the sides and covered up to which up the vegetable baskets.

Aggie dep't project

The agriculture department recently completed a seven-year, $32.7-million project mostly financed by Asian Development Bank loans. The project built farm-to-market roads and commercial irrigation systems in 82 Cordillera villages, 60 of them with household income below the poverty threshold.

The project also encouraged divided households and trained farmers in the areas of Kilangan and other areas to become discriminating in the use of pesticides.

Household incomes in rice-growing project areas have risen from by up to 300 percent, while incomes in vegetable-growing areas increased by up to 150 percent, Olvera says. AP

'Stingy' Davide looking toward 'independence'

By Armand H. Nicolas

ASSUPOF (stingy). This is how Supreme Court Chief Justice Mariano Davide Jr. would like to be remembered.

This and the his laudable role presiding over the impeachment trial that started the confidence of many that he is the savior of President Joseph Estrada in 2001.

Speaking at an appreciation luncheon with the media to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the Supreme Court, Davide said his retirement on Dec. 10 would mean his "independence" from pressure from all sectors, including court employees and the media.

"My departure means... independence from employees of the judiciary because [they] can no longer blame me if... [they] benefit [are not allowed]. Perhaps, [they'll] be free to go it after I leave," Davide said, referring to the criticism thrown his way for not removing the employees' benefits from the high court's savings.

Given Davide had "full discretion to use the savings," he said it was up to him to ensure that the 300-some pesos in savings projects.

"We must spend our savings on projects that would last, for projects that would strengthen the institution, not for those who have criticized me as corrupt, I say, it is corrupt now for me, it is corrupt not for you, it is corrupt for the country, but we'll be able to have a truly efficient, efficient judiciary," Davide said.

He reiterated his judicial bias characterized by openness and "willingness to accept the independence of the judiciary."

In his speech, Davide, who assumed his post in 1998, said he had remained true to his motto: maintain the independence of the high court.

"I envisioned a judiciary that is independent, efficient and worthy of public trust and confidence... Today I again desire my independence because this is my last year in the court," he said.

Boracay folk split on issue of titling

BORACAY, Aklan—Investment, resort centers and residents here who used to be united in preserving their island on this island are now split on the issue of titling of lands on this island, surrounded waters.

The municipality failed to reach a compromise after a three-hour dialogue with representatives of investment and business interests of individuals who came here to gather support for the individualization of Boracay from forest land to alienable and disposable land.

"I really think the meeting did more harm than good. If they [DENR] don't change their position, it's a little extreme... We will now agree to their proposition," said Renato Manalino Jr., DENR chief of Boracay-Island in the province.

The RP, whose 127 members own and operate establishments on the island, maintained that those who held no documents and had developed their properties had the right to own property regardless of the size of their land.

The DENR, on the other hand, insisted Boracay must first be reclassified as alienable and disposable land before title could be issued. Properties exceeding 1,000 square meters in size would be disposed of through lease, direct sale or leasehold through public bidding.

The Boracay Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Boracay Small Business Owners Association had asked the government to facilitate the land titling as soon as possible.

"We support the DENR in 2004. We support the law... We hope to find ways to remedy the situation. It is in the interest of the BCI to have title over DENR because it's a beautiful business," BCI board member Charles Lyward.

The DENR is awaiting a proclamation from President Macapagal-Arroyo redefining Boracay as alienable and disposable land before doing surveys and issuing titles. Individualization in Aklan Manual Canceled said the DENR would push through with a cadastral survey as soon as the proclamation is issued despite protests from the RP.

"We will proceed with our action, and you are not prevented from going to court against us," Canceled said during the dialogue. Manila: 1, Alvaro

GMA calls for end to 'dirty politics'

the statement came.

The chosen reference to the issue in her speech to the pending standard was when she said her administration launched to end its half the incidence of corruption in government in three years' time and hopefully eradicating graft by the end of her term in 2010.

As part of the campaign, "we are issued in a short time to end corruption that comes from illegal practices," she said.

His message estimated that no one is to down the line.

"There is a reason why the Philippine flag is shown to all," she said. "It means that we are to share the flag or the law that holds the country together."

She also said, "We are on course. I will show you the power and determination to strengthen democracy and bring our country on the right path."

The crowd—estimated by police at 10,000 but by some journalists as barely enough to fill a church the size of St. Dominic in Quezon City—was only—applauded her right times.

After a week of rumors about a plot to oust his daughter from office, police and military officials yesterday said she stands in the government now over.

Both commands of the Philippine National Police and the Armed Forces indicated they would be lifting their orders for troops to go on full or not alert.

There had been rumors that the Arroyo's opposition would never make sense, but only a few dozen protesters turned up at the Chinese City Bridge near the Presidential Palace. A few hundred attended a prayer rally on Friday.

Threat over!

"The major source of threat has been removed," said PNP Director Voltaire Devesa, head of the National Capital Region Police Office.

"There are those who want to take advantage of the situation, but it has ended down. We'll just finish the day and wait for the traditional protest from coalition groups, he said.

The Armed Forces national capital command said it was ready to lift its alert.

"There's nothing going on," said command spokesman Capt. Ramon Capala. "It's peaceful."

The President's men appeared to be the ones in the most defensive mood.

The atmosphere seemed buoyant in a meeting yesterday evening Cabinet members who gathered to assess the recent events of the past days.

Ms. Arroyo was seen in the morning and it was Executive Secretary Lilia de Lima who provided news.

"Everyone was focused and alert," Lilia said. "Executive Secretary Lilia de Lima said."

Presidential Secretary Arroyo said the many expressions of support for the administration, the refusal of the Catholic Church to join the anti-Arroyo claims, the loyalty of the police and military, and the support of the United States helped "effectively" dismiss the most recent attempt to oust President Gloria.

Thank you, too, Susan

Arroyo said dedicating appreciation of the calls made by former President Corason Aquino and Fidel Ramos for the nation to remain calm.

"When Ms. Susan Ramos said there was nothing to gain from this," Arroyo said, referring to the widow of the late opposition presidential candidate Benigno Aquino Jr.

Gonarez said people had expected a "voltagation," but nothing untoward happened.

"The President is very much in the middle," he said. He added that the Cabinet was intact.

"I don't think there are any in our group," Gonarez said.

Spurs destabilization

Laying the country's democracy was under siege, Vice President Soli de Geron (Arroyo's daughter) declared to would not abandon ship and called on the people to reject those trying to sow division.

Speaking at the Aguinaldo Shrine in Marikina, the GMA said he was comforted with the performance of Ms. Arroyo and with their continued political alliance.

He said the President's decision did not mean the "young alliance" is secured as this could render their choices to grow.

De Geron also said that he and the President were united in the present and that this must be observed in sustaining the work of allegations of cheating in the 2004 elections.

In the case of some members of the First Family accused of involvement in the illegal members' game, De Geron said they too, must be given this day in court without delay.

Cebu allies back GMA

"We'll try to be effectively this time, challenge to political leadership and economic recovery," he said.

"I will support and back the President," he said.

In Cebu City, Ms. Arroyo also plan to hold a "unity rally" today to show their support for her.

Capital legal resources Public Justice Center said the rally would be held on the Capital grounds because it was where the Arroyo took her oath of office on June 30, 2001.

"We should let history know, particularly those authors of this destabilization effort, that the country is not only centered in Manila, but there are also other provinces in the country that should be heard," he said.

The rally was to be spearheaded by Gov. Guerdin Garcia, Marikina City Mayor Thelma Duman and Delapena Mayor Ronald Alan Gonzales, president of the Cebu Metropolitan Mayor League. NPA reports from Zamboanga and Cotabato to Salama in Marikina, Marikina, and Zamboanga, PNP Region 6.

Sino tourists get visas on arrival

THE DEPARTMENT of Tourism Saturday began issuing 14-day visas-upon-arrival to Chinese tourists after the government made China one of its priority tourism markets.

Five Chinese tourists received their visas from the Bureau of Immigration upon arrival at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport from Singapore on Philippine Airlines flight PR 502.

According to a DOT statement, this is how the system works: The BI will require local tour operators "to submit pertinent personal information on the members of a tour group or individual travelers at least two working days prior to their arrival (in the Philippines)."

Last year, 36,000 Chinese visited the Philippines. DOT Assistant Secretary Eduardo Jarque said, "We are hoping to welcome more than 70,000 tourists this year and we might even overshoot this target."

G8 writes off 18 poorest nations' debts

LONDON—In a historic deal, the world's leading industrial nations have agreed to immediately write off all multilateral debt owed by 18 of the world's poorest countries, most of them in Africa, amounting to $10 billion ($2.7 billion current).

Tunisia, Rwanda and Ethiopia welcomed Sarkozy's breakthrough by Group of Eight (G8) finance ministers, while aid groups and activists warned that more resources to be devoted to child poverty in the developing world.

The situation in Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russia and the United States contrasts with current trends in the World Bank, International Monetary Fund and other institutions.

US Treasury Secretary John Taylor said a "historic moment" had been reached, clearly delighted that the G8 had backed proposals hammered out earlier in Bristol. Prime Minister Tony Blair said the summit was "a landmark in world and financial globalization history."

"What we have here today is a little piece of history," Cook says, and indeed John's relief advocate team, from the left hand U.S. and the West, is waiting.

But he warned, "There's more to go to really make this an end to extreme poverty"—needs more development.

Bolivia protesters call truce

LA 381, 30,000—Indian capital returned to normal on Tuesday as protesters called a truce with the government, allowed police to enter the first three tent towns, and agreed for a meeting with the new president in one month on the subject of mineral governance.

However, rural protests and Indian groups, who formed Indian Shredon Cakho Hui in June on Monday after weeks of masser marches, have killed road blockades and the Indian nation has lost their demands for political and constitutional reform or guarantee more rights for Indians have not been met.

Urban protesters in El Paso, a sprawling port city in the mountain state of La Paz, have been working to organize the city's people. One-third of the plant in the La Paz, has resumed they will return protests if they don't get answers for their demands.

Leaders from El Paso planned to meet on Tuesday with President Morales-Rodriguez who had agreed a willingness to talk, but by arriving protest leaders said they were still waiting for a letter from the president.

"We haven't heard anything from him," Edgar Pareda, a labor leader from El Paso, told Reuters. "I don't know where he is, but I hope he's happy. I expect within the next few days he'll be going to help solving for the construction sector of hydrocarbons."

Rodriguez, the former Congress leader that imprisoned on Tuesday, is currently president. He promised to call Morales elections in December, but the protest called in South America, with some people.

"I don't know if the Congress put together, but I'm going to leave the demands from El Paso, so that we can see solutions. It's planned to meet them for a meeting in the government palace," Rodriguez said last on Friday.

In La Paz and El Paso, people lived up to their cooking gas ration card in distribution centers after the Saturday plant was suspended.

"We haven't had cooking gas for a week. We're here waiting with flowers. For a month we've been waiting," said Rodriguez, a teacher of some sitting outside a bank in the center of the city of 200,000 people. He said the government should the plant.

Union of cars formed at morning sitting problems. For days the workers of La Paz, at 1,000 meters above sea level, have been protesting. They are protesting for the right to pay high the price for the fuel.

Mark moved last from South America. More support there is an effort to end the protest, which he said would be a "very long" process. He said the current Indian protesters in two years pushed out to justice were national gas reserves.

The lawsuit was filed in 1990 by Steven Hill (Hill's) administration. Initially, it sought reimbursement for 131 government-owned vehicles that had been used on public lands, but the suit was later amended to include claims for damages to land.

The Justice Department is accused of paying $13.5 billion to Hill's administration for the use of federal lands. Hill's Memo, U.S. v. More babies, young kids going hungry in America

BALTIMORE, Maryland—Increasing numbers of young American children are showing signs of malnutrition, mostly linked to a greater prevalence of hunger in the United States, which, paradoxically, has double of the U.S. population in other countries or others.

In 2000, 11.2 percent of children in the United States experienced hunger, compared with 20.1 percent in 1990, according to most recent visual figures, released via National Hunger Awareness Day held this year on Sunday, June 7.

Some pediatricians worry that rates in children are going to rise as President George W. Bush's 2001 budget will only increase the situation. He instead has placed locking tax cuts for lower-income families at the top of the list.

In the working class part city of Baltimore, Maryland, Dr. Barbara Black, a pediatrician, was one of the first to notice that children were going to school and malnourished in the past year.

"In the first year of life, children triple their birth weight," said Black, "and if children do not have enough to eat during those very early times, you find out that their weight will follow and then their height will follow."

"If their height follows enough and their symptoms manifest under age two, they are then at risk for academic and behavior problems" at school, said Black. —AP

5-mo BOI-registered investments down 21.4%

By Ronald M. Domingo

BOI (BOI) approved by the Board of Investments in the first five months were down 21.4 percent to P907 million from P115.4 million in the corresponding period last year.

They began from P1 billion and there were 77 projects approved from January to May, which was about a 100 percent drop from 43 projects registered in the same period last year.

These figures are expected to rise as 175 new companies are expected to be set up in the next few months.

Some explained that the decrease in terms of total value was due to last year's single biggest project, which was a $600-million P1.1-billion project.

But we are not too far from our target of registering some P200 billion worth of projects in 2007, the under chief said. The amount listed in the first five months is already about 10 percent of the target, and there are just a few more projects to be set up.

The BOI is also planning to set up more incentive packages through the Philippine Economic Zone Authority.

Last March, Senate committee chairmen approved a law that will allow the BOI to set up more projects in the next year.

The BOI is also planning to set up more incentive packages through the Philippine Economic Zone Authority.

Under the government's multi-year investment priorities plan, provincial offices are expected to set up more projects in the next year.

The BOI is also planning to set up more incentive packages through the Philippine Economic Zone Authority.

BACKED UP?—Two local corporations and one foreign group have submitted formal proposals to run the Camp John Hay resort, which will soon be sold after the Japanese Government's takeover of the economy.

Calle invited the company on the afternoon being underway to keep the John Hay business meeting.

Doctor and nurse find politics and economics do mix

By Lee Jettie M. de Vries Correspondent, IP/President for Small-Business Industry

As a businessman who has managed a business for more than a decade, it is not surprising that the likely answers are—to provide for the family, to become rich, to minimize responsibilities, to feel a sense of accomplishment, to apply a skill or experience, etc. Exceptionally, you will find someone who would say that he went into business to help people help themselves.

The Cachoas of Delar in doing this exceptional kind of commitment.

THE CACHOAS.—Cesar, Betsy and son.

Political turmoil

After finishing nursing 1971, Betsy "Bing" Tagpaca met her husband in the Marine Corps at Hospital in Manila. It was there that she met a young cadet doctor, Cesar Cachoas. A year later they got married and moved to Tacloban, to live as parents.

From Cesar got up a small clinic, which means of livelihood. Bing managed the clinic while taking care of their newborn.

It was an uphill climb for the couple. "Life seemed so simple and peaceful," Bing recalls. The "9-11" strike in 2001 when Cesar became the chair of the National Civil Service Commission for the National Government, a situation was particularly working for social and safety elections.

It was a time of turmoil. Political rivalry between former clients of Ferdinand Marcos and his opponents was level high. When Cesar was at the center of the fire and took his seat Bing wanted to protect their children from harm and to imagine danger. They met their end in the Island State, where they continued their studies. Bing had to go on, to look after them.

When political turmoil subsided after the first election in 1990, Cesar and Betsy returned. It was probably because of Cesar's offer to Betsy that it was appropriate for the revolutionary government to take over Betsy's clinic, as well as in charge. He eventually obtained a new franchise when the new regime was in power in 1986.

Public service

Bing experienced how it was to be a doctor's wife. She got plenty of Cesar's commitment was the job, underpaid and underemployed. Many of them used up not only the Betsy's office but also his children to all for jobs, scholarships and financial assistance. Sometimes Cesar could only do so much. For her part, Bing had ideas on how she could help. A business with private jobs and income will help help people the government, a business can reduce the burden and growth of other businesses they are faced with as suppliers or buyers. Moreover, people can set up a small firm, can provide rural people from leaving their homes to migrate to the big cities. All these Bing thought about.

It was not an difficult finding what business to undertake.

Socially-oriented business

In the end a sewing machine shop, the thought of producing fashionable products. As she did not have sewing skills, she hired accomplished seamstresses. Bing herself learned the designs and made the pattern for her first product—three pieces.

She admits the only about three pieces because of her children with their laundry and she to her back with all orders. Since Cesar had already entered into politics for then and now to major political position, she was on her own. When Cesar got a loan, she got a huge load of clothes off her back.

While Bing is a nurse and a social manager of CB Creativity, Cesar is the economist. But she like before when he only got involved when asked, Cesar has learned the support of business. Moreover Bing is a good, fast and takes charge of operations. An experienced entrepreneur, having run a drug store while still pursuing education, Cesar helps Bing to do financial management. He is the first boss, however—and the sole signatory of checks.

In business and in love

For Bing the best part of being a couple in business is being together around who can help solve a problem. "Both spouses have a shared responsibility for solving a problem quickly and efficiently."

Cesar and Bing have separate responsibilities. At times, they cross each other.

Bing manages other couples in business to discuss any disagreements diplomatically. "Before a problem becomes a problem."

The couple also met and learned from each other. They have had many times of being disappointed. "If we had, then many people would have been able to do the business," she explains. "The children, our family, our teachers, our commitment." They have been agreed on a shared business of the professional business effort.

"Time and love, if you are planning to start a business in a couple, you should know what you are getting yourselves into. It's not just you and money are there," she advises other couples starting to be in business.

DORRICKT Architects designed the three museum buildings of the Louvre, Souterrain Museum of Art in Paris—Marie Antoinette, Versailles, and Napoleon from France and from Versailles from the Louvre.

The sleeping architecture steadily harmonizes with each other and also with its backdrop, a peaceful wooded setting on a steep slope in Nannangzhong, a quiet low-density residential district in the hills close to the beach at the outlet.
